Poisonous Snakes of the World

The American Copperhead is common throughout much of the southeastern U.S. This member of the pit viper family has a cross-band pattern that helps it hide among fallen leaves. Its bite is almost never fatal to humans.